62nd Annual Program

ENERGY UNLIMITED

Scientists tell us our natural sources of energy are dwindling at a time when the population is increasing. A crisis could ensue unless bold, imaginative and innovative methods are devised to counteract the crisis.

In the field of health there has been such a drain on current resources in terms of both manpower and means that changes must be made to meet current needs. Unless changes are made, we face a crisis which could undermine our strength and will as a people.

In the case of the natural energy crisis, the answers must be primarily technological—in the case of the whole health crisis, the answers must be primarily human but also technological.

Public health is one facet of the health complex. Presuming that public health workers cannot order change in the entire realm of health, they must start with their own spheres—their institution and themselves. What can and should we do?

Out of our own understandings of the needs and the opportunities not from the drawing boards of Washington or Raleigh—should come creative ideas to help energize ourselves and others who covet resolution of the health crisis.
